

Rev Jim Marsh, Jr. has been working with children, youth, and families for 30 years in a variety of settings. As pastor, spiritual director, educational advocate, individual, family, and group psychotherapist, he has helped to provide the necessary guidance and accountability to help people realize their unique potential. He specializes in working with children and adolescent young men and their families. Jim believes strongly that the biggest question a person can be asked is whether they feel like they belong, or do they feel abandoned? Creating communities of belonging is a passion for Jim.

He has been on FMN board since 2009, and believes that one of the greatest marks of discipleship is how we deal with our possessions, money being chief among them. Helping people make the connection between what they believe and how they understand their relationship to money, is crucial to being able to live a free and unattached life to things of this world. This desire to help others be transformed in this way is what drew Jim to board membership.
