

Susan K. Taylor

Susan K. Taylor has invested much of her life exploring the intersections of faith and money. Susan wrote her first money autobiography at a Faith and Money Network workshop shortly after arriving at graduate school at the University of Maryland, where she earned a Ph.D. in economics. She weaves money and faith together in her own life, as a mother of two (now young adults); a partner in Just Money Advisors,* a financial planning and investment management company that specializes in socially responsible and community investment strategies; a member of the Investment Committee of the Mennonite Education Agency; regular writer on money and spirituality; vice-president of FMN's board of directors; and an active member in her Louisville, KY, church.
